Little Things That Matter

Executive Summary

Research Goal

The research aims to assess user perceptions, usability, and satisfaction with the redesigned homepage and product pages. It focuses on users' first impressions, ease of navigation, content clarity, and identifying areas for improvement to enhance the overall user experience.

- Assess first impressions of the homepage and its differentiation from other banking sites.
- Evaluate usability in finding products, understanding layout, and standout features.
- Identify user preferences and gaps in content and features on the homepage.
- Gauge reactions to the mega menu and its ease of navigation.
- Evaluate satisfaction with Level 3 pages (Credit Card, Savings Account, Home Loan, Car Loan), focusing on content clarity and ease of use.

- Axis Aha chatbot.
- On-screen pop-up.

Hero Banner

Users typically skim the hero section unless it aligns with their intent, making focused and relevant content essential to capture attention effectively.

- Most users merely glanced at the hero image and were more interested in exploring the content in the following folds.
- Some users did engage with the hero image, they viewed it as a supplementary element rather than a primary factor influencing their actions.

Ribbon

The ribbon served as an anchor point in desktop testing, effectively capturing user attention. On mobile, the ribbon components appeared side by side, prompting curious users to explore the 'Explore Now' option more actively compared to the desktop layout, where components are separated by headings.

- Most users understood the ribbon's purpose in the hero section, with some using it to navigate to different pages. During mobile testing, the ribbon stood out prominently, encouraging users to explore it further.
- Some users expected a single click to navigate to a page but needed two clicks to select a feature within the ribbon. Despite this, they still appreciated the feature.

Scrollbar

The scrollbar was appreciated for indicating system status and was seen as helpful by users. However, on mobile, limited horizontal space sometimes made it invisible, causing difficulty in navigating sections.

Its navbar-like appearance confused some users, making them mistake it for global navigation. Those unfamiliar with local vs. global navigation were initially unsure but believed they would adapt with use.

- All desktop users appreciated the flexibility and freedom provided by the section navigation scrollbar.
- Some users also mistook the scrollbar for global navigation bar, rather than a tool for switching sections within the same page.
- Few mobile users found it glitchy and slow.

5/16

Users misinterpreted the scrollbar as global navigation.

2/7

Mobile users rate the scrollbar to be glitchy

Product Banner

The banners were appreciated and understood by all users, regardless of platform, age, education level, or location, due to the use of simple, clear language, relatable imagery, and effective affordances in CTAs and hover interactions.

- Banners effectively conveyed their purpose to all users.
- While desktop and mobile users had different reading/scanning patterns, the message was clearly communicated to everyone.

Calculator

The calculator and its variants were found to be highly useful, appreciating that it served as a one-stop solution for quick calculations on products like EMI, balance, loans, etc., without the need to switch to other windows or apps. The real-time information display further enhanced this appreciation.

" I like the real time data change it is showing, gives me an idea. Very nice, nothing to dislike"

-36, Tier 2

- All users appreciated the calculator on the page, especially its real-time display of information related to changes.
- Few users who typically avoided calculators due to their limited or generic bank transactions found it helpful.

Summary

Users felt the homepage was intuitive, with elements placed as expected, clear and easy-to-understand language, and visuals that effectively complemented the text. The overall design was simple, effective, and enabled users to easily comprehend and take action.

Visual Appeal

Most users felt the page resonated with Axis's branding through its use of colors, text, and quotes.

Intuitiveness

All users, including mobile users, found the page and its sections highly intuitive, requiring little to no assistance while navigating.

What could be better?

Users found the low contrast between the top menu elements and typeface color challenging for navigation, suggesting a bolder typeface or improved contrast.

Additionally, users with less digital experience often confused small elements in bounding boxes for clickable buttons.

Savings Account

Entry Point

Most users accessed the savings account page through the ribbon, as it was the first prominent element on the homepage.

Some users were curious about where it would lead them. Users familiar with the top navigation bar continued using it out of habit.

5/8

Users clicked the ribbon out of curiosity.

Feature Iconography

The icons were appreciated for setting expectations for the products discussed on the page below.

However, their button-like shape, resembling clickable elements from other apps and online platforms, led some users to believe they were interactive.

Additionally, as the app was designed with a mobile-first approach, the desktop version lacked scroll affordances, such as navigation arrows, causing navigation challenges to some users.

- Some users appreciated the feature icons in the second fold and found them useful
- However, a few users mistook these icons for clickable elements,
- A few others noted the lack of scroll affordance on the desktop version, which made it difficult to explore further options.

5/16

Users misunderstood feature icons to be clickable

3/9

Desktop users complained about missing affordances

Task Completion

Users successfully found a savings account variant using filters or by skimming through details. Most completed tasks assisted, while a most needed basic guidance, especially with the new filter feature.

Task Completion

Filter

Users appreciated the filter for simplifying their task, providing greater search freedom, and saving time compared to manual skimming.

However, some overlooked the feature as they didn't expect it on a banking website, while others felt the lack of visual chunking failed to indicate it was part of the same functionality.

The quick link chips below went unnoticed due to the cluttered space, but users believed repeated use would address this issue.

- Most users considered the filter option the best feature on the page.
- A few desktop users took time to notice it and mistook it for advertising hence overlooked it.
- While features like 'drop down filter' and Scroll Filter were highly noticeable, most users missed the filter chips/quick links below them.

"This is filter, I did not expect it here, but a great addition"

-46, Tier 2

Product Cards

Users missed non-crucial details in areas outside their typical scanning pattern but were satisfied with the cards as all essential information was within their focal reading area.

- All users found the cards well-designed and informative, aiding their decision-making process.
- However, a few users missed certain components, such as the detail in the top-left corner or the boxes in the right corner.

“If I pause because of a visual and see that the text adjacent does not relate to it I may think that the brand or service is not serious about commitment”

-46, Tier 1

Balance Calculator

Users found the calculator confusing due to its excessive number of fields, unfamiliar terms like 'select a particular quarter,' and the inability to test it in real time, unlike the homepage calculator.

Those who found it welcoming appreciated it as a helpful reminder to track the balance required to maintain their account.

- Most users understood the purpose of the balance calculator on the page, but some found it confusing or unclear. A few users, however, appreciated it as a welcoming feature.

5/16

Users were confused about the purpose of the calculator

"Minimum balance is written, so I think it is for that, but why to have a calculator for that?"

Do's & Don'ts for Credit Cards

Basic guidelines to avoid high-interest debt & enjoy secure payments, cashless transactions, rewards & cashback offers with Axi Bank Credit Cards.

Do's when using Credit Cards

- 1 Choose Wisely Axi Bank offers a range of credit cards designed to cater to your varied interests and requirements. Research thoroughly, considering factors such as prevailing interest rates, additional fees, the limit on your credit card, rewards, cashback and other offers tailored to your spending habits before making a decision.
- 2 Mind the Terms Before applying, understand the terms and conditions. Some cards have no annual fees, while others waive fees based on spend.

Don'ts when using Credit Cards

- 1 Mindless Spending Avoid mindless spending to prevent hefty debts.
- 2 Minimum Requirements Don't settle for minimum payments; they lead to high balances.
- 3 Excessive Applications Avoid excess card applications to preserve your credit history.
- 4 Uncontrolled Usage Refrain from maxing out your limit; it harms your credit score.
- 5 Cash Withdrawal Avoid withdrawal of cash.

Users expected a more direct heading that clearly conveyed the content of the feature icons, rather than one that sounded disconnected or different from the icons' purpose.

- Some users found the heading in the second fold misleading, as it mentioned 'types of home loans' but listed general features instead.

They're not exactly neighbors, are they?

Percentage Banner

The banner, which highlighted interest rates based on salary and non-salary categorization, served as an anchor point that encouraged users to explore further. It also conveyed a sense of transparency, which users appreciated as essential in banking.

- Most users found the banner informative and a valuable feature. Some users welcomed the upfront display of such details.

Users, having experienced the flexibility and ease of filters on other pages, expected the same functionality on the home loans page to reduce effort and improve navigation.

- Some users felt that a filter was necessary on the page to categorize and quickly find the desired type of home loan.

6/16

Users expressed a need for a filter option

5/16

Users expressed all home loans to be clubbed together

Product Information Cards

(Due to a known technical glitch), some visuals were missing, which users found important for decision-making. These visuals were especially helpful for users with limited English proficiency.

- Some users emphasized the importance of visuals alongside text for better comprehension of the service the product was offering.
- However, a few users felt that the card contained enough information to help them select a product without needing visuals.

Mega Menu

Heatmap data revealed that user interaction was highest on the left side of the Mega Menu, which is subconsciously viewed as the primary area.

Activity gradually shifted rightward, with reduced engagement due to fewer options, minimizing cognitive load.

Interaction on the far-right side was minimal, with users overlooking ads, additional information, or cross-sell elements.

- The Mega Menu on the desktop version was well-received by most users, particularly for its variety of options and the inclusion of quick links to specific products.
- A few users instinctively searched multiple times for a filter option within the quicklinks, especially in the Home Loans section, when it was absent on the page.

2/9

Desktop users actively explored the Mega Menu for information.

Accessibility

- Some users noted that features in dark mode, such as hover animations and affordances like bounding boxes indicating clickable elements, were not sufficiently evident or intuitive.

- On desktop, elements like the 'scroll back to top' interaction were not very noticeable, whereas on mobile, it was more prominent and actively utilized by many users.

Executive Summary

Executive Summary 1/2

Brand Identity

- The maroon Axis color is prominent across all pages, reinforcing brand identity and creating a cohesive feel.
- Users found the design modern and aligned with contemporary banking trends.

Accessibility & Readability

- Suggestions to improve top navigation contrast and typeface readability in certain areas.
- Some features in dark mode lose their intuitive quality, highlighting a need for enhanced accessibility.

Design perception

- Visually appealing, modern, and inviting design that sparks curiosity and conveys a high-tech, up-to-date impression.
- Compared favorably to competitors like SBI, with better representation and content coverage.

Executive Summary 2/2

Filter & Scrolling Experience

- The filter option is appreciated, with users suggesting its extension to other sections like loans.
- Excessive scrolling noted, especially on Card and Loan pages, making navigation feel tedious.
- Scrollbar usability does help mitigate this..

Content & Other Features

- The website feels comprehensive, informative, and packed with essential features.
- Banners and certain sections are engaging and inviting.
- Users appreciate the detailed content and innovative features, considering it superior to their current banking experience.

Overall Sentiment

- The design is well-received as visually appealing, user-friendly, and representative of modern banking.
- Users are eager to see the new design implemented.
